What are the Humanities?

Potential projects may focus on: “language, both modern and classical; linguistics; literature; history; jurisprudence; philosophy; archaeology; comparative religion; ethics; the history, criticism and theory of the arts; those aspects of social sciences which have humanistic content and employ humanistic methods; and the study and application of the humanities to the human environment with particular attention to reflecting our diverse heritage, traditions, and history and to the relevance of the humanities to the current conditions of national life."¹

Summary:

HumanitiesDC is offering the opportunity for DC residents conducting and presenting original humanities research to become Humanitini Curators. Each Curator will create an in-person or virtual public humanities program based on their research or area of expertise. As part of the application, prospective curators will need to fully describe this research topic, and where it is situated within a wider humanities field.

The public programs will follow HumanitiesDC's successful Humanitini model that brings thoughtful humanities discussions to Washington, DC's happy-hour scene. Download the Curator guide as a reference to in person Humanitini programs here. HumanitiesDC will set up and manage online registration for each program. Each curated project will be free for the public to attend. Curators must budget for a professional videographer to film in-person Humanitini program and edit the footage, and an ASL interpreter to provide interpretation for virtual or in person programming. If the program is conducted virtually, it must be recorded and edited for submission to HumanitiesDC. Curators will also write an evaluative report on the challenges and successes encountered while translating their research for a public audience.

This opportunity is part of the Humanities Grant Program supported with funding from the District of Columbia Government through the DC Commission on the Arts and Humanities.

Funding Scope:

Strong connection to a humanities discipline – Prospective curators must identify one or more humanities disciplines to which their project is connected. They must be able to demonstrate that they have conducted extensive research on the topic they hope to translate into a public program.

Topics that are both thoughtful and entertaining – The Humanitini is informative and educational, but it is also a fun and engaging experience for audiences. Humanitini programming should be engaging to a variety of attendees and is not intended specifically for a scholarly audience. The programmatic content should spark interest and engagement among attendees. Programming should take place during happy hour or between 5:00 pm – 7:30pm on a weekday.

Informed, diverse panels and capable moderators – Ideal panels will be comprised of speakers from both inside and outside academia.

A plan for attracting an audience of at least 30 people.

If proposing an in-person event, the strongest requests will have a tentative commitment from a Washington, DC bar or restaurant to host the program.

A commitment from a professional videographer to film the Humanitini program and edit the footage to create a high-quality record of the program.

Other Required Proposal Elements:

- Identification of the project's Washington, DC Ward(s) or neighborhoods served.
- A description of the key personnel who will work on the project.
- A timeline of project activities and milestones covering the full grant cycle.
- A marketing strategy for the project.
- A budget (in the provided template), and a budget narrative.

- A detailed plan for complying with relevant provisions of the Americans with Disabilities Act. You will also be asked to provide expected audience and participant data – this is for informational purposes only and is used for reporting to HDC’s funders.

Application Review Process:

Qualified applications are submitted to a review panel comprised of Washington, DC residents with backgrounds and/or experience in humanities programming or scholarship. These panelists score the proposals assigned to them based on an established rubric that closely aligns with the questions in the application. HumanitiesDC requires that all involved recuse themselves from review of any application that presents a personal or professional conflict of interest, and panelists must sign a statement acknowledging that they will adhere to this policy.

The rankings presented by the panelists are adjusted according to thematic, geographic, and audience diversity by the HumanitiesDC grants staff and a final slate of proposed projects are submitted to the HumanitiesDC board for review.
